

- 3D reconstruction is performed using a corollary of the Fourier slice theorem
- The method is applied to light emission from plasma in the PROTO-SPHERA experiment
- A six-camera setup enables accurate time-resolved tomography of plasma discharges
- Tomographic inversion reveals hidden core emissions masked by outer plasma layers
- Formation of a plasma torus around the centerpost is resolved within 8 milliseconds